

Gentle on Fabrics, Gentle on the Environment

NEWS TO USE

February 2013

Natural gas dryers provide instant heat that's much gentler on laundry than the dry heat of electric dryers. And, clean-burning natural gas is gentler on the environment, allowing you to leave behind a smaller carbon footprint with each fresh load.

Faster than electric dryers, natural gas models allow clothes to tumble less and last longer. Many models have sensors that measure the amount of moisture inside the dryer and automatically shuts it off when the load is dry. This saves energy and reduces wear and tear on fabrics.

And, because natural gas drying costs half as much per load as electricity does, it's gentler on your budget throughout the lifetime of your appliance.*

Be greener than you think when drying laundry with gentle, clean-burning natural gas.

Dryer do's and don'ts

- Ensure faster, more even drying by separating lightweight fabrics from heavy ones.
- Maximize airflow and performance by cleaning the lint filter between each load.
- Prevent warm air from escaping by not opening the dryer door unnecessarily.
- Allow air to circulate freely by not overloading the dryer.
